A CJN EXCLUSIVE

By HARRY GOLDEN
Author of "Only In America"

THE RUSSIANS NEED IDA ROSENTHAL MORE THAN OUR WHEAT

One wheat sale does not an Iron Curtain penetrate nor a single Test Ban a peaceful ally make. But there's more than one way to skin a cat. A multiplicity of foils waits in our cold war arsenal. They come in various shapes and sizes, as you will see.

Secretary of Commerce Luther H. Hodges recently despatched to the Soviet Union the United States Soft Goods Delegation, a mission of five prominent clothing manufacturers. The only woman among these pleno-potentiaries was charming 77-year-old Ida Rosenthal, Chairman of the Board of Maidenform Inc., a lady known popularly as the matriarch of the uplift industry (what a wonderful thing is metaphor)!

The idea behind this exchange program, of course, is the hope that if we can appeal to the vanity of the Russian female we may get the mind of the Russian male off underground testing. The strategy is particularly appropriate at this time.

Thirty years ago, when Mrs. Rosenthal last visited the Soviet Union, Russian fashion consisted of a babushka and a big smock. She reports that while Russian women are no fashion plates today, at least they are beginning to realize their dresses ought to accommodate their figures rather than their figures accommodate their dresses.

The Russians need Mrs. Rosenthal a lot more than Maidenform needs business. The big Russian mama has vanished but there are 100 million others looking like sulky voluptuaries with not an A cup in the bunch. At best, the government can supply them with one brassiere a year which takes a week's salary to buy and requires at least one day's wait in a long queue. When you remember that the average American girl can lay in a year's supply during one lunch hour with time and money left over to visit her mutual-fund broker, it's understandable why the Russians insist on a news blackout.

Long ago, the Russians gave up the fur hat, the caftan, and the big black boots. Their clothes are not too different from our own, although it is true that Soviet diplomats and statesmen dress like mechanics who have been unemployed for a very long time. The more they discover chic, the easier it will be to deal with them.

It's the bearded Cubans, running around in fatigues, their machine guns slung like accessories, who give us headaches.

And the Chinese — well, the less said about their style in both dress and deportment the better.

Secretary Hodges is to be congratulated on his subtlety in assigning Mrs. Rosenthal to the Delegation. She is a lady fired with the idea of making the whole world bosom buddies.

Monday evening, Toronto's Jewish community leaders were present at the Israel Bond - Toronto Zionist Council Dinner at the Beth Tzedec to welcome the Minister of Justice of the State of Israel, The Honourable Dr. Dov Joseph, and to join in tribute to a veteran Canadian Zionist, Robert H. Soren. Chairman of the evening was John J. Glass. Lawrence Shankman, Chairman of the 1963 Toronto Israel Bond Organization, in a brief report on the progress of the current Israel Bond Drive announced that to this date, 65% of the $2,000,000 campaign target has been achieved.

The warm response of those attending the dinner to the eloquent appeal by Dr. Joseph for increased Israel Bond purchases to assist Israel's pressing economic development needs gave further impetus to the Toronto campaign, and gave the distinguished Israeli leader tangible evidence that the Toronto Jewish community stands firmly at the side of the State of Israel in all its plans and hopes. Julius Hayman, President of the Zionist Organization of Canada, Central Region, made the presentation to guest of honour Robert H. Soren for his 50 years of dedicated and unselfish devotion to the cause of Zionism and the State of Israel.

URGE STATE AIDS DAY SCHOOLS

B. B. Meet In Hamilton

The Conference of the Eastern Canadian Council of B'nai B'rith which takes place in Hamilton from this Saturday evening, November 2 until Tuesday, will be the 79th Semi-Annual but also the very last Conference of the Council.

Steps will be taken at the Hamilton Conference to dissolve the Eastern Canadian Council which has served as co-ordinating body for fully four decades.

The new District will come into operation next April first. It will give Canadian B'nai B'rith a large measure of autonomy and an opportunity for self expression and self determination.

SIGLER ELECTED; DIAMOND, WURZBURGER, LEVINE STRESS EDUCATION EMERGENCY

HAMILTON, Ont. (CJN). — In a history-making decision, the Orthodox Jewish congregations of Ontario, during the closing session of their first convention, unanimously called upon the Canadian Jewish Congress to immediately see to it that Jewish Day schools be given financial assistance from provincial and municipal funds for their general studies program.

The convention, held at the Adas Israel Congregation here, was attended by representatives of nearly all Orthodox synagogues in Toronto, Ottawa and most of the orthodox Jewish congregations elsewhere in Ontario.

This unanimous decision immediately followed the address made by Dr. Joseph Diamond, head of Toronto's Bureau of Jewish Education, who appealed to the delegates to demand state and municipal support for Day schools so that they do not remain the exclusive educational institution of the few who can afford it, but become available to the many who want it — and need — it.

Dr. Diamond stressed that, though he does not speak for the Bureau of Jewish Education as such, he is aware the majority of Canadian Jews wish the Canadian Jewish Congress, as their representative, seriously tackle this problem.

Dr. Diamond, immediate past president of the American Association for Jewish Education, also cautioned Canadian Jews against the accepted fallacy that "we in Canada live in a society where church and education are separated. They are not; not in Ontario and Quebec. And it would take many an upheaval to reverse this situation which is a result of the British North America Act."

In a dramatic address, Dr. Walter S. Wurzburger, who spoke during the afternoon session on "church-state" issues, pointed out the challenge facing Canadian orthodoxy. The time has passed, he said, since the orthodox Jew was looked upon as one who attaches the mezuzzah to the edifice built by others. We are historic Israel, he continued, and we should speak up courageously on all issues, including the ethical and moral problems facing our affluent society.

Joseph Levine, president of the Associated Hebrew Schools of Toronto, introduced the debate on government support for Jewish Day schools when he described the difficult financial situation now facing our schools.

The convention elected Samuel Sigler of Toronto chairman of the newly founded Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of Ontario. Other elected officers are: David Hoffman, Hamilton, vice chairman; Sol Edell, Toronto, treasurer; Harry Magder, Toronto, secretary.

Executive committee: Hyman Bessin, Ottawa; Dr. Baruch Diena, Ottawa; Jack Friedman, Toronto; Meyer W. Gasner, Toronto; Charles Laiman, Hamilton; Michael Nesry, Toronto; Kurt Rothschild, Toronto, Sam Sable, Toronto; Dr. Arnold Sage, Kitchener; Dr. Morrie Saltz, Brantford; Samuel Wortsman, Toronto.

Other resolutions adopted by the convention deal with religious activities in small communities, the strengthening of the synagogue, youth organization and Kashrut. On education, the convention declared solemnly that it considers "the Jewish all-day school on the elementary and secondary level the most desirable form of Jewish education".

A galaxy of leading rabbis and lay leaders participated in the convention. They addressed the assembled during all sessions which began on Friday and concluded Sunday night. The speakers were: Dr. Samson R. Weiss of New York; Saul Bernstein, administrator UOJCA; Rabbi Morton Green, Hamilton; David J. Hoffman, Hamilton; Dr. Joseph Kaminetsky, New York; Hyman Bessin, Ottawa; Rabbi Pinchas Stolper, New York; Rabbi Sholom Gold, Toronto; Rabbi Mendel Lewittes, Montreal; Saul Sigler, Toronto; Rabbi Abraham Reuben, Ottawa; Sam Sable, Toronto; Kurt Rothschild, Toronto; Rabbi Stanley Weber, Brantford; Sol Edell, Toronto; Dr. B. Diena, Ottawa, Myer Dorn; Toronto; Dr. Harry Cohen, Hamilton; Dr. Nahum Rabinovitch, Toronto; Rabbi Herbert Millen, Hamilton; Dr. Morris Salz, Brantford; Rabbi Philip Rosensweig, Kitchener; Morris Waxman, Hamilton; Sol Seidenfeld, Hamilton; Rabbi Gedalia Felder, Toronto; Rabbi Mordecai Ochs, Toronto; Harry Botnick, Toronto; Harry Magder, Toronto. Mrs. Jacob Muskin, Cleveland; Rubin Gross, New York.

The banquet session was presided over by Samuel J. Sable of Toronto.

TORONTO UJWF HEARS PLEA FOR SOLIDARITY

An eloquent plea to the Toronto Jewish community to create "that kind of secure community structure that will encourage the survival of Judaism" was voiced last week by Rabbi Arthur J. Lelyveld of Cleveland at the 26th Annual Meeting of the United Jewish Welfare Fund of Toronto.

Rabbi Lelyveld, speaking on "The Future of North American Jewry," cautioned that "the pressure of immediate needs" may draw attention from those aspects of community life which are essential to survival. He asserted that although it is important to attack the most pressing problems, it also is necessary to provide an atmosphere in which" a generation of committed leaders can teach and lead".

He pointed to a strong endowment program as a method of providing the financial base to ensure the continuity of Jewish agencies and services. He noted that the Cleveland Jewish community, which has an endowment program now worth $7,702,000, gets "a wonderful feeling of security in knowing that it has a strong and permanent fund to assure financing in case the usual fund-raising methods run into difficulty."

Alex G. Fisher, chairman of the Bequest and Endowment Program of the United Jewish Welfare Fund, who spoke following Rabbi Lelyveld's address, said the Toronto Jewish community "is faced with the need for a stable program of financing our own health and welfare services."

"You, the leadership of the Jewish community, over the years have been generous. You have given of your funds and your efforts to enable our community agencies to prosper and grow and provide essential services. But we are coming upon a more difficult financing period with the multiplicity of campaigns, with increased demands for service and growing needs for capital structure, so that it is incumbent upon us to take a firm step immediately towards ensuring that the future needs of our community will be met."

The development of a fiscal reserve through special grants, and of trust funds through bequest, "must be made a reality," he stated. "I would like each of you, leaders in our community, to think about what you personally can and will do by way of a special bequest and you can help perpetuate the community and memorialize your name in it at the same time."

Rabbi Lelyveld pointed out that Theodore Richmond, who earlier in the program had accepted the chairmanship of the 1964 United Jewish Appeal of Toronto, had spoken in terms which showed that Canadian Jews are close to their roots. He said Mr. Richmond's expression that his appointment was "the epitome of nachas," could not have been spoken by many American Jews, "most of whom would not know which of his work had its origin in the Greek".

He concluded that "the Jewish view of the future is that its outcome hinges on our own efforts to influence it, so that we can build a meaningful future. We must recognize, however, that the eternity of Israel is not automatic, and that if we are concerned with survival we must live all the more effectively, and plan to do the things that will enable us to survive.

"Those of us who are concerned with significant Jewish survival must bend ourselves to the task of Jewish education. Unless we educate effectively, there will be fewer and fewer Jewish causes for us to worry about in the future.

Full Text Of Resolution On Day Schools

WHEREAS we, are deeply concerned with the intensification of Jewish Education in our region; and

WHEREAS such intensification is possible only through the medium of the Jewish Day School; and

WHEREAS the rising cost of the Jewish Day Schools, wherever they exist, precludes many parents from sending their children to such schools; and

WHEREAS the parents who do send their children to these schools now carry the double burden of paying tuition fees for the instruction of the general subjects of the Day School curriculum and the regular school tax for which they receive no benefit whatsoever, thus saving the Province of Ontario as well as the Municipalities considerable sums of money which they would otherwise have to spend on the education of those children; and

WHEREAS the limited resources of the Jewish communities of Ontario where such Jewish Day Schools exist cannot provide for the financial needs of the general (secular) curricular subjects which these schools are obligated to teach but for which Provincial and Municipal authorities have direct responsibility,

1. We, representatives of Orthodox Congregations in Ontario in convention assembled on Sunday, October 27, 1963, in Hamilton Ontario, unanimously endorse the Brief submitted to Canadian Jewish Congress, Central Region by the Committee for the Support of Jewish Day Schools, and that

2. We respectfully urge the Canadian Jewish Congress, Central Region to apply on behalf of those schools for Governmental financial assistance for the General Studies Program of the Jewish Day Schools in Ontario.

the challenge

When Dr. Joseph Diamond, a most respected educator, addressed the Orthodox convention in Hamilton, he made sure to stress the fact that he did not speak for Toronto's Bureau of Jewish Education when he stated his case for government subsidy to Jewish Day schools. I should like to emulate Dr. Diamond by declaring that, when I second his proposal, I do not speak for The Canadian Jewish News but for myself.

* * * *

Seriously, I think the Hamilton convention placed on the agenda of the Canadian Jewish community and North American Jewry at large a problem which must be solved.

The opponents of our demand — that governments and municipalities support the secular curriculum of the Jewish school — are, in my humble opinion, frightened, terrified Jews. They suffer from what I may term an equality complex. And they always are ready to sacrifice the highest Jewish interests in order to prove to the non-Jewish environment that they are worthy of acceptance as equals. From personal experience, I daresay that the non-Jewish society would rather accept and integrate a Jew without any feeling of inferiority and one who stands up courageously for his traditions, for his beliefs and for his culture. The most integrated citizen is the most integrated member of his own community or group. I never am impressed by those who speak about separation of church and state while the majority of the people do not approve of such factual or de jure separation.

* * * *

One illusion of those who would like to engage the total Jewish community in a battle for changing the customs and the traditions of the majority (which is a Don Quixote adventure) is: in countries where the state is absolutely disengaged from religious education, the atmosphere is more liberal. Is Russia that society? Or is it Great Britain where religion is the concern of the government?

* * * *

I, for one, am not ready to sacrifice more generations of growing children at the altar of a non-existent equalitarian society. Perhaps this minority of Jews who oppose government support of Jewish Day schools is right in principle. In practice, however, it is Utopia, the price of which is the abandonment of generations of Jews to ignorance of our historic mission and to actual assimilation of our youth.

The time has come to speak up and act for the sake of the children who are the responsibility of the community.

HUMAN RELATIONS

Undeclared Love

DR. ROSE N. FRANZBLAU

QUESTION: I have been going with a fellow for six months. We are in our middle 20s, college graduates with advanced degrees.

He asked me once if I loved him. At that time my reply leaned toward the negative. But now I am very, very sure I do. He has not brought up the question since.

I know he likes me, but further than that I do not know his feelings about me. I want very much to know, because the more I fall in love, the worse it becomes not knowing.

Do I bring up the subject, or do I wait?

ANSWER: Of course, there are many ways, subtle and underground though they may be, in which the woman relays the message that she finds the man attractive. But the prerogative of expressing love and of asking the hand of the other for marriage is usually the man's.

Some men hesitate, however, to express their love, for fear it will be rejected. The man then questions the girl about her feelings for him. Should she express any doubt or hesitation, his fears seem justified and he may postpone offering his love. In some ways, such a question is a message telling the girl that nothing beyond friendship and dating can ever come of their relationship.

It is quite understandable that you feel rather blue now about the standstill which your relationship has reached. Your answer to him asked for more time for yourself, but it also gave him more time to determine how deeply he felt about you.

It may be that he is now so desirable only because he is so unattainable.

You may have feared unconsciously that to say yes to his question might have meant to lose him altogether. When he continued to see you, that banished some of this concern and allowed you to develop increased feelings of affection and desire toward him.

Hence it would appear that for you to bring up the subject, even in the most gentle and roundabout way, would be to chance the prompt termination of your relationship with him. At the same time, there is always the chance that he is the kind of man who waits for the girl to bring him around to expressing his feelings for her. The fact that he has continued to date you, even after your great hesitancy, supports this hypothesis somewhat.

However, you must not lose sight of the possibility that this is all his way of saying that he wants you as a date, but not as a future mate.

There are some males who want females to take over the pursuing and wooing. Some women do so because it meets their need to dominate. When two such persons find each other, they may meet each other's needs perfectly, and the match can be a good one.

If you feel you might be hurt in the end by pursuing this course, you could bring up the subject by telling him you would like to give the latest report on the question he asked you some time ago.

FRANKFORT, (JCNS) — The Auschwitz trial will open before a local Jury on December 20, according to an official announcement here on Monday. However, only two sessions of the court are planned for this year, on December 20 and 30.

Only exceptional circumstances could cause further delay in the proceedings, a spokesman for the competent court said, adding that the 23 accused were entitled to a hearing as soon as possible.

Eleven of the accused are charged with murder, the others with complicity in murder. Twelve are free while the others are being detained. It is expected that about 250 witnesses from 15 European and overseas countries will testify before the court.

JABOTINSKY CENTRE

LAUDABLE INITIATIVE

Joseph Klarman of Israel, one of the world's leading Zionists, now is visiting Canada on an important but little publicized mission. A veteran Herut leader, Mr. Klarman presently heads the committee which sponsors the new Jabotinsky Memorial Centre in Tel Aviv which, upon completion, will be the tallest edifice in Israel's largest city. It will house a museum of the underground, a publishing house, the Jabotinsky archives and, in general, serve as a living reminder to the future generations of what Jabotinsky stood for and what he accomplished.

Vladimir Jabotinsky who passed away twenty-three years ago in New York, was perhaps the greatest Zionist statesman after Herzl. He came to us from an assimilated family and brought to the Jewish scene the kind of non-Jewish statesmanship, untarnished by any Jewish complexes.

He was the spiritual father of the Jewish revolt against the British occupation of Palestine without which there would have been no Jewish state. Thus, it is good to hear that the Bet Jabotinsky is being erected by a non-partisan committee. For Jabotinsky never considered himself a party man but a soldier of his people.

PERENNIAL PUZZLE

SOVIET POLICY IN THE MIDDLE EAST

An indication that the Soviet Union may be changing her anti-Israeli policy came recently with the announcement of a direct commercial transaction between Israel and Russia, — the first since the Sinai campaign.

The deal came in the form of a quantity of raw furs from Leningrad directly to a Haifa furrier. The $20.000 shipment is said to be now on its way to Haifa, via Finland. It is considered most significant that the shipment was made possible through the initiative of Russia's diplomatic mission in Israel. This is taken as an indication that the Soviet Union, as a large fur exporter, may be interested in expanding on to the Israeli market.

Until now, Israeli furriers have bought Russian furs only indirectly through London or New York agents as the Soviet authorities had stopped direct sales to Israel seven years ago.

Observers believe that this new attitude may be a part of the policy of relaxation of East-West tension.

However, the picture at East River, shows another facet of Soviet policy vis-à-vis Israel.

Here are the essential facts as seen from the United Nations:

● The Israeli Foreign Minister's six-point proposals for a Middle East "detente", presented to the General Assembly of the United Nations, give regional expression to the changed atmosphere now prevailing in East-West relations. An end to the nuclear-arms race is only one step towards removing the dangers of war. So long as the Middle East arms race continues so does the likelihood of a conflagration which could quite easily involve the Great Powers.

● Mrs. Golda Meir's impressive speech shows that the "Eshkol line" is still capable of further elaboration. Leaving aside all polemics and counter-threats Mrs. Meir laid down a programme which could not but command the approval of the overwhelming majority of delegates, the Afro-Asians in particular. In many ways the six points are a restatement of the famous five points once agreed on by Nehru and Chou En-lai, adapted to Middle East needs and with the addition of a novel clause proposing complete disarmament with mutual inspection.

● Since Mr. Eshkol took office and propounded his new approach the U.S.A. State Department has warmed considerably in its attitude towards Israel. The U.S.A. representative's stand at the Security Council on the Israeli-Syrian border incidents gave full expression to this changed attitude, which cannot have arisen simply and solely from the justice of Israel's contentions, for this has been equally cogent on previous occasions.

● The Arab spokesmen merely brush the whole question of peace aside and reassert their alleged right to use armed force to restore an imaginary "status quo". While the Western Powers are interested in preventing unrest in the Middle East, the African States in particular are genuinely opposed, on principle, to any suggestion that boundaries between States can legitimately be altered by force and can be expected to make their opposition felt.

● The slightest expression of readiness on the part of the Arab powers to enter into negotiation with Israel would usher in a far-reaching revolution, but it cannot be expected to come easily.

So long as the Soviet Government and the Communist block are prepared to promise the Arabs support in the event of U.S.A. pressure, Nasser can afford to ignore Western disapproval. Only willingness on the part of the Soviet authorities to reconsider their Middle East policies (which have brought them real success in the region since the early 1950's) could pave the way for joint East-West action. This is hardly likely to come about without a substantial measure of prior agreement between the Soviet and Western governments over their policies towards wider world problems.

However, Russian policy in the Middle East is still puzzling and dangerous.

Significant Breakthrough

By SAUL COWAN

NORTH YORK RELIGIOUS EDUCATION CONTROVERSY

Mr. Cowan is vice-chairman of the Board of Education of the Township of North York, Metropolitan Toronto.

On October 15th, the North York Board of Education made a decision which may have repercussions throughout the province of Ontario. Since 1944 there has been growing dissatisfaction with a course in Christian religion taught in the public schools. The opposition to the course has taken a long time to gather strength because many thousands of Ontario residents did not realize that the course was a highly sectarian Christian course teaching basic beliefs which were not acceptable to other religions.

In the last two and a half years the opposition to the course has become a virtual storm of indignation. Jews were not the only ones who felt that their basic rights as citizens had been seriously compromised. Many groups of Protestants such as the Baptists, Seventh Day Adventists, Unitarians, the Orange Order,—the Ethical Education Association, as well as the Canadian Jewish Congress have made public their opposition to this breach of liberty in a democratic society. To its protest, those in favour of the course always replied that parents could exempt their children from the course by having them leave the room. They also point out that teachers, too, were not obligated to teach the course if they did not desire to do so.

North York Board of Education, now the second largest in Ontario, and fourth largest in Canada, became the focal point of the controversy in February, 1961. At that time, a number of religious and lay groups, the Congress among them, joined forces in the presentation of briefs. They asked the board to request of the provincial government exemption of North York Schools from teaching the course. Speaking for various groups were S. M. Harris and A. Alan Borovoy for Congress; Val Scott representing thousands of residents; Prof. John R. Sieley, for the Ethical Education Association; Rev. John Morgan, for Unitarians, and many others. They bore the burden of the attempt to restore the situation as it existed in Ontario Schools for 100 years prior to 1944.

In a series of meetings a temporary compromise was decided upon. Under the compromise a vote was taken in those schools where there were many exemptions. Where a majority of parents declared themselves favourably, the classes were held at 3.30. Those who wanted the course remained after the other children left.

(This compromise was inaugurated in 13 schools where there were many exemptions. The rest carried on with classes at other times. The compromise seemed to exhaust the series of acrimonious debates in which the trustees were subjected to severe pressures. Of the original trustees who participated in the earliest debates, only Saul Cowan remains who has constantly fought against the course and Isobel Walker has been just as consistantly for it. Others on both sides have resigned or have been defeated at the polls. Today, Cowan, Moscoe and Tacon are unequivocally against the course. Mrs. Walker, Mr. Darnell, Mr. Newton and Mr. Stanbury have been consistently for the course. Mrs. J. Pearce has voted on occasion on either side).

In the last year there has been a lull in the expression of public opposition. But there has been a growing realization on the part of all citizens that something is radically wrong with the religious course. What has begun to percolate through to the parents is the realization that the religious education course is not what its name would indicate; It is not a course in comparative religions. It is a course in sectarian Christian doctrine far different from the songs the parents used to sing, the Lord's Prayer they used to recite, or the Bible readings they used to listen to. Even today many thousands of adults still believe that the fight concerns these opening exercises. Every day many Jewish parents repeat the false notion that Jews should not be too angry with these opening exercises. When they are led to realize that a fundamental principle of democracy is at stake; that the state is actually taking sides by legalizing and authorizing the teaching of Christian doctrine their thinking changes. This change in thinking applies also to fair minded individuals of all faiths. All three Toronto newspapers have come out for the change.

This is the background which has led in the past year to a new meeting of minds. A year ago the parents of Owen Blvd. School asked the board for their blessing and support in seeking a common ground of understanding amongst all the parents of their school. The Board promised their co-operation, in this study, but for a whole year nothing more was heard from this group.

A few weeks ago this group of parents were back with their report. They stated that after many consultations and much study they could not agree on a common course of religion and asked the board to exempt the school.

It was at this point that Trustee Peter Tacon brought in a resolution which won the unanimous consent of the board and opens a little wider the door to a fair solution. The Motion in its entirety reads as follows:

Trustee Tacon, seconded by Trustee Walker, moves that WHEREAS there has been a great variety of opinion concerning the merits of the present couse of religious instruction in our public schools; and WHEREAS even the strongest supporters of the course have voiced some dissatisfaction with it; and WHEREAS all reasonable people recognize the contribution of the various religious groups to our moral, cultural and economic well being; and WHEREAS the need for mutual respect and unity of all religious and non-religious groups is always of concern to our people and our government; THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that this Board appoint a Committee of three trustees to wait upon the Prime Minister of Ontario and the Minister of Education to petition for the setting up of a Committee or Commission to report and recommend on the following:

a) How moral, ethical and citizenship values are taught in our public schools;

b) how children of all religious groups can be taught respect for their families' beliefs and for the beliefs of other groups;

c) the changing role of the family — privileges as well as responsibilities in the teaching of ideals to its members; and

d) how teachers in training can best be prepared for their roles in teaching moral and ethical values to our children.

The motion was carried unanimously.

After some manoeuvering the board increased the number of trustees on the delegation to four. They are: trustees Robert Stanbury, Isobel Walker, Peter Tacon, and Saul Cowan. The request to see the Prime Minister and the Minister of Education has been forwarded and the Board is now awaiting an appointment.

It is easy to raise one's hopes unduly concerning this request to the Provincial Government. On the other hand, it is inconceivable that the government will continue a course that can only lead to further diversiveness. The motion that the North York Board approved unanimously implies that there is much that is wrong with the course. The motion must carry some weight. Even the Catholic Church is finally about to remove from its teachings the responsibilities of the Jews for Christ's death. Surely the province of Ontario can do no less.

It is perhaps too much to hope for that teachers associations will take this opportunity to urge that teaching of a religion in a public school setting is an affront to professional integrity. Doctors and lawyers and social workers are not asked to take sides in the matter of religious belief. For a teacher to be pressured into accepting or refusing to teach the course cannot be other than an affront to conscience. Surely there is an obvious difference between the fact of the divinity of Christ and the facts of French, Mathematics, Science or History.

The Jewish community has from the beginning seen the implications of teaching this course in our public schools. Its opposition has not been a selfish partisan one but one based on the real injury it does to all faiths and to the concept of democracy itself. If the Church and the family are going to be deprived of the responsibility of making decisions concerning the religious and moral beliefs of their children, then the reason for the existence of these institutions has been seriously undermined. The good health of the state demands that it does not take sides. The motion initiated by the North York Board deserves the widest publicity and support.

WHERE FIGURES LIE

We, Canadian Jews, are inclined to be self-congratulatory because we have in this country a census and statistical system that keeps track of the number of religious and ethnic groupings. We know, therefore, at least once in ten years exactly how many Jews, Presbyterians, Adventists, Anglicans there are in Canada and also how many of us are of Ukrainian, German, French or Anglo-Saxon descent.

Warner is trying to "solve" the problem.

● Milk and Honey, starring the Yiddish favorite, Molly Picon, celebrated its third performing year October 10th. Plans are to bring the production to London, and after the first of the year, to Tel Aviv. Jacob Kalish, Molly's husband, thinks the Israelis will like the singing and dancing parts. It is the first musical play about Israelis. Many of the singers and dancers in the show are Israelis. ..31-year-old Jerry Herman from Jersey City, New Jersey, wrote the words and music.

Molly is no stranger to Israel, having made six trips there. On her first visit, she gave a concert for 4,000 people. And in 1958, as guest of the Israeli government, she helped to sell $24,000,000 worth of bonds. Her favorite city is Jerusalem, which is one of the major settings of Milk and Honey. She believes "Jerusalem has more originality than any other city in Israel. It has the old and the new. There's feeling of tradition and background and heritage and folklore. There are cobble stones in the streets, and yet, not too far away, there are some of the most modern buildings in the world. It is absolutely intriguing."

Molly has great faith in Israel.

"Imagine!" she exclaims, "it wasn't long ago that I did The Kosher Widow on Second Avenue. And who knows? I may go back there to perform some day. After all, there is no such thing as severing connections with any kind of theater. The Yiddish theater will go on being popular. Maybe it's not so flourishing as in my day. But then there aren't so many European immigrants arriving in this country."

Molly Picon divides her time between her two homes in New York and in Mahopack, N. Y. She occasionally manages to visit her five adopted sons whom she acquired from concentration camps after World War II. Three now live in Israel, one in Brussels and one in Greece.

She keeps active in New York's United Jewish Appeal.

● Israel's four major theater companies are back in action following their annual month's vacation. In Tel Aviv, Habimah returned with "Irma La Douce"; Ohel opened with the popular "The Idiot"; the Chamber presented Shakespeare's "Much Ado About Nothing". The Haifa Municipal Theater opened with the Russian play, "The Flea".

● A court in West Berlin fined a lawyer 300 marks for making antisemitic remarks to the Jewish owner of a bar and singing the Nazi hymn. The lawyer declared in court that he had always opposed Nazism and had represented Jewish claimants in restitution cases.

When he continued by saying he had been very drunk at the time of the incident, the judge suggested the case against him be dropped. When the prosecutor protested, the court imposed the fine.

SERMON FOR THE WEEK

FATHER AND SON

Can two people walk together unless they be agreed? (Amos 3.3)

The question which the prophet poses immediately calls to mind the dramatic incident of Abraham and Isaac and their journey to Mount Moria — two people sharing the same emotional experience and devoted to the same object. It must be self-evident that one cannot read this narrative without being conscious of its application to the contemporary scene. All the social, cultural and religious problems involved in the father-son relationship are reflected in this presentation. It gives prominence to the fundamental problem which each successive generation has to examine and solve in the light of existing circumstances.

It would be too simple to adopt the Biblical narrative as the master pattern and profound it as the ideal to be followed. The patriarchal society in which the father's règime was absolute and the son's duty was merely to obey no longer exists. The older generation is no longer able to dictate policy. If anything the roles are changing, for the younger generation grows active and restless and the older has to assume the part of mediated passivity.

One of the major issues raised by this problem is the attitude of the two generations to religious principles and practices. One thinks of the father anxious to preserve the form of Judaism he knows and the son who has his own conception of the form which Judaism should assume. Frequently the two concepts clash and one fears for the preservation of the historic and traditional attitudes to the faith.

How then can one visualise the "two walking together", without insistence on the activist attitude of the father and the passivity of the son? In terms of modern requirements there can only be one solution — there must be active participation on the part of both generations. The father, if he honours his Judaism and desires it to be preserved by his son must apply himself to an understanding of the spiritual needs of the younger generation. There must be a clear and intelligent appreciation of the demands of time and place. The place is the destination which it is desired to reach and the time is the recognition that "modernity", however much it may be abused, must be reckoned with.

Mental adjustment is required, a re-orientation of the method of transmission so that Judaism shall make its own appeal to the mind of the young who are so influenced by dominant thought. And as for the youth, whilst it may by nature be rebellious, one should not assume that it wishes to discard Judaism as being outmoded and valueless. The younger generation would not raise objections to the teachings of Judaism, if they wish to know the purpose of Judaism and wish to see its professed teachings applied to life. Whilst they may be perplexed they seek guidance and demand that religion provide an answer to their queries. They do not criticise merely for the sake of poking fun at time honoured traditions.

If there be any estrangement between the two generations it is because of the absence of adequate and suitable forms of presentation of old truths. This is a situation which could easily be remedied, given the good will on the part of those responsible for Judaism's transmission. By adopting modern methods, by attempting an honest harmonisation of the historic teachings of Judaism with trends in contemporary thought, our youth will be enabled to re-assess the perennial values of Judaism and will thus find the essential, elemental agreement which will ensure that the two generations will walk together.

U. J. A. CASH DRIVE

The Cash Campaign of the 1963 United Jewish Appeal of Toronto "will be intensified during the coming weeks," it was announced by John R. Devor and Samuel Zeldin, co-chairmen.

"Although the campaign has been going on for three weeks, and some progress is being made, we still must urge that the Toronto Jewish community respond with cash payments on UJA pledges," they stated.

In a statement issued this week, the co-chairmen said, "Money is desperately needed if the UJA programs are to continue. Every dollar pledged during the past campaign is needed now to pay the bill for rescue, relief and rehabilitation of more than 600,000 men, women and children around the world.

"Up to this point, the programs have been continuing on a credit basis. Our obligation to pay the actual costs is now at hand. At stake is the future and existence of Jewish refugees in France, North Africa and 25 other nations.

"Without funds, transportation, medical aid, reception, clothing and food for our brethren in need may be halted. We appeal to every person who made a pledge to UJA to step forward now and put our Toronto community 100 per cent behind our Jews in need in their time of need."

They also pointed out that United Israel Appeal and United Jewish Relief Agencies, which receive the UJA allocation for work overseas, "have asked for cash now to avoid a potential disaster. Without these funds, UIA, UJRA and all the other beneficiaries of the campaign at home will be in serious jeopardy."

TO EACH HIS OWN

By RUTHIE

Remember once when I told you about my sister May in Chicago? I visited her about a year-and-a-half ago when my niece Sandy married. Well, by hook or crook, I'll just have to find time to go there again.

There's a new baby boy and, according to May's description over the phone, a cuter, smarter, better baby doesn't exist. She swears he looks at her and almost says, grandma. This I've got to see. He's all of six weeks old.

Can you imagine, such a peanut, a little nothing, can turn over a whole household. May says, since Sandy came home from the hospital, life isn't the same anymore.

"What a change in Sandy," May confides. "Before she married, she was the laziest thing on two feet. Now? In the middle of the night she anticipates the baby's krekhs (groans). Before he can wail loud enough, she's already there with the bottle."

Oh, yes. The baby's name is Monroe — from Moshe, after his maternal great grandfather. Grandparents on both sides he has, to 120 years. You should have seen the sleepless nights Mommy and Daddy spent till they decided upon that metziah (bargain)!

There's a trend towards Hebrew names. But Moshe didn't hit the spot. Of course, they love biblical names — if it was David, maybe, or Joel. But Moshe? By the time he grew up, they argued, his friends would call him Moish. Never mind, that Moshe led his people through the wilderness and presented them with the Ten Commandments on Mt. Sinai.

Marvin? No. Melvin? No. Morris? There we go again. Maurice? Nah. Murray? Too ordinary. Michael? If there's nothing better.

Well, no one knows how they dug up Monroe. Anyway, if that's what it is, let the little one carry the name, to 120 years. Any way, like James Monroe, maybe he'll be a president one day. That's every parent's dream. And if not president of the United States, maybe president of a verein (organization) or a synagogue. And is it impossible to think — maybe of Israel? A president anyway.

It's pretty hectic these days in Chicago. From the hospital May took Sandy and Monroe (who could find a nickname for that) to her home for two weeks.

"I'll give the kid a chance to recuperate, meantime I'll show her a few things."

Well, so far as showing the new mother a few things — she may as well forget it. Because everything she suggests is old fashioned.

Sandy won't even let her mother wash the baby's things. Of course she has diaper service. But it takes her all day to wash properly an undershirt. Throw his stuff into the washing machine? With everything else? Are you crazy? And she irons the flannel nighties. So naturally she's tired.

She doesn't dream of cooking. Now my sister has the job of sending her every night some supper. She feels so sorry for poor Lenny. In front of her eyes, he's getting skinnier and skinnier. How will he be able to support a new baby if he doesn't eat?

She's counting the weeks till she sends every Friday some homemade chicken soup, with noodles, liver, carrots, tomatoe, onion, parsley mashed in.

And to May that's a pleasure. I suppose you have to be a grandmother to understand it.

When the new tyrant gives with a man-sized burp, it sounds like the finest music. When his milk comes out the other end, it's more fragrant than the finest perfume. When a facial muscle twitches, everyone is hysterical.

"Look, he's smiling."

I get May's goat by telling her to send him out to shine shoes already. There's nothing like early experience to toughen one up for life's vicissitudes.

She huffily retorts that she'll remind me of my words when I become a grandmother. Ahllavei (I wish)!

The Girl Who Came To Supper

by BARBARA I. PEARL

With much fanfare, The Girl Who Came To Supper bowed into the O'Keefe Center, where she will be for one week more. And a good thing too, because, were it not for her, the entire Noel Coward-Harry Kurnitz musical would prove a dud.

Mr. Coward's star has ascended and reached its full height of productivity. Can it be that this uncontested genius is beginning to retrogress? For, The Girl.. definitely does not do him credit. It hovers in the shadow of all before-the-turn-of-the-century musicals and is reminiscent of other such productions.

General theme centers around the coronation of King George V, in 1911. The Grand Duke Charles, Prince Regent of Carpathia (Jose Ferrer), and his coterie are guests. During his brief stay in London, he seeks female diversion.

Mary Morgan (Florence Henderson), showgirl from Milwaukee, seeks to win his heart; with the help of the Queen Mother (Irene Browne), she eventually does.

If Mr. Ferrer seeks his theatrical comeback via The Girl...., he has made a grave error. Actually, he is too serious and dramatic an actor for a light role. A flick of the wrist, a facial expression, a quick twist — it is all a waste here, for the star of Cyrano de Bergerac. Furthermore, in song Mr. Ferrer, sounds like a foghorn.

In the final analysis, however, The Girl Who Came To Supper should have a fairly big run. For the talents of some others cannot be minimized. Florence Henderson as Mary is collossal. She is gorgeous and sings beautifully. She reaches her peak "belting" and dancing to the tune of something very similar to The Hucklebuck.

Irene Browne as Queen Mother provides excellent support. But it is Tessie O 'Shea — Ada Cockle, fish and chips vendor — who, as the female Alfred Doolittle, brings down the house.

Most striking is Oliver Smith's scenery, and costumes designed by Irene Sharaff. From the cool blues, elegant purples, sedate browns, brilliant reds, pithy greens, flashing diadems, to opulent furs —one's eyes just bug.

The Girl Who Came To Supper won't make history. But she will provide much entertainment.

IMPROVISED QUARTET — Director Joe Layton (from left), stars Jose Ferrer and Florence Henderson, and composer Noel Coward (seated at piano), all instrumental in putting together The Girl Who Came To Supper, at Toronto's O'Keefe Center through November 2nd, enjoy a wee bit of a singfest between curtains.
